A NEW INVESTMENT REALITY

CLIMATE INVESTMENT INSIGHTS FOR THE ASIA PACIFIC
24-25 NOVEMBER — ILLUMINA, SYDNEY

 Sponsorship Prospectus

Our Theme: A New Investment Reality.

The investment landscape is changing.

A rupture in the global order — geopolitical disruption, strategic rivalry and fragmented markets — is reshaping institutional portfolio management. Trade flows, valuations, sovereign risk and capital allocation face a volatility that shows no sign of easing.

For Australian institutional investors — stewards of one of the world's largest retirement savings pools — the implications are material and immediate. How they respond will determine their ability to protect and grow the savings of their beneficiaries.

Within this context, climate investment factors cannot be viewed in isolation. They interact with economic strategy, trade and national security — shaping which industries attract capital, where infrastructure investment flows, and how quickly the energy system is rebuilt. For investors, these dynamics have direct implications for how capital is allocated.

The Asia Pacific region will drive global energy demand. Building secure, low-emissions energy systems will require record levels of investment in renewable energy, transmission, storage, critical minerals and grid capacity — one of the most significant investment opportunities of the decade.

But the opportunity cannot be separated from the risk. In a delayed, disorderly or mispriced transition, climate-related damage and disruption will erode asset values. The consequences will be significant.

The science is unambiguous. Award-winning climate scientist Dr Joëlle Gergis has warned that the 2020s will determine whether warming can be stabilised. For investors, that scientific deadline is also a capital deadline.

The question is no longer whether to act. It is how to deploy long-term capital with discipline — in a volatile, uncertain environment where policy shifts quickly and information is imperfect.

The quality of your insight determines the quality of your decisions. Those who grasp these shifts will be better placed to act where they can, manage what they can't, and protect — and grow — long-term returns.

That is the new investment reality.

For institutional investors navigating this environment, access to decision-grade insight has never mattered more. The IGCC Summit 2026 brings together the analysis, expertise and peer perspectives needed to navigate a system still adjusting.
